To participate in the contest: Students K-8 must walk or bike to school at least once a month. The more a student walks or bikes, the more likely he or she is to win. Walking to the school bus stop also counts.

To enter the contest: Submit your progress online by the end of each month and track your trips with a progress chart available for download at: walk-win.com

To win the contest: Winners are randomly selected. Again, the more a student walks or bikes the more likely he or she is to win. Multiple winners are selected at the end of each month. Parents and guardians can also win prizes.

Poetry Out Loud is a nationwide competition for students to memorize and recite the works of classical and modern masters.

10 LESSONS the ARTS teach

1 How to make good judgments about qualitative relationships.

Unlike much of the curriculum in which correct answers and rules prevail, the arts show how judgment prevails.

How qualities interact — whether in sight or sound, prose or poetry, dance or theatre — matters. These qualities cannot be neglected because they are the means through which the work becomes expressive.

3 Problems can be solved with changing circumstances & opportunities.

Arts learning requires a willingness to surrender to unanticipated possibilities of work as it unfolds. Art is a dialogue delivered by the artist to the work. It is a conversation with materials punctuated by surprises and uncertainty made possible through conversation. With art, one hopes for flexibility of purpose and surprise. The aim is more than impressing what you know into a material; it is discovering what you don't know.

2 Problems can have more than one solution & questions can have more than one answer.

The arts embrace a variety of outcomes. Trial and error are virtues in the arts. While the teacher of spelling is not particularly interested in promoting the student's ingenuity, the arts teacher seeks it.

4 How to see and celebrate multiple perspectives.

There are many ways to interpret what we see, taste, smell, feel and see in the world. It is important to understand there are different perspectives by different people based on their experiences. We may not have grown up eating artichokes, yet can celebrate those who have and who enjoy them.

5 The limits of our language do not define the limits of our cognition.

What we come to know through literature, poetry, and the arts is beyond the literal. Through metaphor we can experience sublime meaning. Movement, color, poetry, music can move us and transform our understanding of the world around us.

7 How to experience the world in different ways.

We discover what we perceive and feel through artistic experiences. Some works of art put us into another world because the experience is so powerful. We should not simply help children learn how to read a book; we should help them use their reading skills to visualize images while they read. Literacy includes the ability to perceive our world through various senses: visual, tactile, kinesthetic, and auditory.

Different artists and types of art styles enables children to understand the world and experience the joy, delight, and insight those works of art make possible. When children perceive and understand a work of art — be it a symphony, a play, a dance, or a painting — they gain skills to then perceive and understand the world in which they live.

8 How to express what can't be said.

When children are invited to describe how art makes them feel, they must reach into their creative (poetic) capacities to find the words that will convey their message accurately.

Talking about art makes special demands on those discussing it: What is required to describe the qualities of a jazz trumpet solo by Louis Armstrong, the surface of a painting by Vincent van Gogh, the seemingly effortless movements of Mikhail Baryshnikov, or the language of William Shakespeare? The task is to express through language the qualities that transcend words. It is here that suggestion and association are among our strongest allies, and metaphor, the most powerful of language capacities, comes to the rescue.

9 How to think through and within a material.

All art forms employ means through which ideas become real. In music, it is patterned sound; in dance, it is movement; in the visual arts, it is form — perhaps on a canvas, a block of granite, a sheet of steel or aluminum; in theater, it is a combination of speech, movement, and sometimes song. Each art form uses materials that impose certain demands on those who use them.

10 If the school values art, the student values art.

We know experience with and through the arts can make an important difference in a child's life. Without question, school curriculum shapes children's thinking. It symbolizes what adults believe is important in order for the young to be competent in the world, and it tells children which human aptitudes are valuable to possess.

The degree to which a school values a subject determines its presence in the curriculum and the amount of time a school devotes to it. The importance of a field of study is not found in school district testimonies, but in when and how often a subject is taught.
